While juggling family commitments with multiple deployments on active duty in the United States Air Force for more than 17 years—including 12 years as a C-17 pilot—Todd Cotsman successfully completed his Master of Business Administration with a Project Management concentration at the University of Management and Technology.

Looking to further his education beyond his current career path, as a liaison with the Army at Fort Stewart, and with an airline industry lacking the luster it had shown in the past, Todd Cotsman discovered UMT’s MBA track, and reasoned it would be wise to branch out; it was time for him to expand his horizons.

Because of the self-paced structure and at-a-distance flexibility of the course offerings, alongside the facts that military tuition assistance and the UMT Book Loan program left no out-of-pocket expenses, this was truly a win-win situation for him—an opportunity to retool in order to expand his job opportunities in anticipation of military retirement.

"I completed 70% of my University of Management and Technology MBA in Kuwait, Qatar, and Iraq. Textbooks shipped promptly and online features were available as if I were in the good ol’ US of A. Talk about true distance learning!"
